

Dilemma 1: The Flight to New York

You are a barrister based in London. Today, you are flying to New York for an important meeting with Client A, who you are representing on a commercial matter. Client A has agreed to pay for your return flight including your time spent travelling. You have already prepared for the meeting with Client A and you decide to use the flight time to work on a different matter for Client B.

