

Dilemma 5: Staffroom Chat

You regularly hear an experienced member of staff in your school complain about a class you both teach. You know this can be a frustrating class to teach because their behaviour is challenging. This teacher comments that they do not bother to plan lessons properly for this class because the pupils 'haven't got the brains to notice'. The teacher also comments that they see no point in marking the work that this class produces because it is 'worthless'.

